dismemberment of limbs in the professor, just the same as he himself had felt. From the study of the facts stated with regard to our case, it appears plain that the experience being not only subjective but objective also, there must have been some common grounds between myself and my friend so as to render it possible for the experience of one to concur with that of the other. It will be seen later on that this common ground may extend not only to one or two, but many more at a time. Now, if it could be possible for the supernatural to make good its appearance and disappearance in tangible material form, could we not imagine that, some such invisible agent taking advant-age of the stronger party over the weaker in a contest may so materialise his forces as could act on the physical plane with such effect as would transform the material particles of a body into their ethereal constituent, the omnipresent animal ether in a trice, reverting to the material properties back again in the course of a return oscillation? For a dynamic

an eye, I
see no reason why it should appear impossible.
